

Copper Moon

For Matthew Shepard (1976-1998) and for his mother and father, June and Dennis Shepard i

Child

of our time, our times have robbed your cradle.
Sleep in a world your final sleep has woken.
Eavan Boland, "Child of Our Time"

In the wake of a thousand years, your body a scarecrow battered silhouette against the starlight of a grave sky death arrives in a pick-up truck steals your shoes and $20 for coke and cigarettes wraps your wallet in a dirty diaper in a garbage pail for this and for love you are lashed to your crucifix your blood a bitter stain on the place that cradled you your face a scarlet mask but for the clean white tracks of your tears and the air around us is a knife and the taste of death is like rust in our mouths and a hundred years closes a savage end to your journey

What hope for a new century unless your brief shining will be an ecclesiastes unless in this broken place some aurora of promise is born unless your tears cleanse the skin of the earth unless our children, born of this time and the next learn from your severed wings and fly follow you out of this geography this darkest heart

I imagine you there in the primal glow of a copper moon the earth curving its shadow across the lunar surface

There will be a season for you when the trees and air and sky are singing and light will begin in the roses opening, in the apples falling from trees and there will be a time for you when the crows will disappear mourning doves will vanish, when faith will rise up with the songbirds of dawn

May your breath be resurrected by the human cantos of mercy.
May you dance beyond these years, your heart breaking loose in cathedrals of winds.

May this new century hold you, tender as a fontanel.

You, Mr. McKinney, with your friend Mr. Henderson, killed my son....

You left him out there by himself, but he wasn't alone... he had the beautiful night sky with the same stars and moon that we used to look at through a telescope. Then he had the daylight and the sun to shine on him one more time—one more cool, wonderful day in Wyoming. His last day in Wyoming. And through it all he was breathing in for the last time the smell of sagebrush and the scent of pine trees from the snowy range. He heard the wind—the ever-present Wyoming wind—for the last time.

Dennis Shepard's statements to the court, November 4, 1999

In the wake of a thousand years I drift back on the bent neck of time to the infant clasp of my firstborn nursing her on an autumn night her eyes reflecting the milky net of stars the earth curves its shadow

a copper moon glows over the foothills and in this primal light I give her to the tidal pulls of sleep and dreams, my hand cupped beneath her heart

I remember her flight through my cave of bones her life spreading open the beginning of music and light an aperture of hope

Rishma Dunlop

in the folds of clean white linen my child so new all around her lightens and rises claims me the distillation of her breath a universe, an infinite refrain that enters me

Baby boy

If anything stood out, it was the fragileness of Shepard Fireside Lounge employees cited by Prosecutor Cal Rerucha

Outside your funeral at the Redemption Chapel Reverend Phelps marches with his cronies from Kansas their signs God Hates Fags a full-color image of you says Matthew in Hell and it is a time to mourn and a time to weep a time to remember your father teaching you songs of childhood Frère Jacques,

Row, Row, Row Your Boat Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star how I wonder what you are up above the world so high like a diamond in the sky the hatemongers at the temple are surrounded a parade of people dressed as "Angels of Peace" white angels for you seven feet high with eight foot wingspans and the crowd cheers them on

I remember that October night at the Fireside Lounge, how death courted you beer bottle and pool cue in hand discussing your politics wrapping the syllables of a serpent's coil around your open heart your smile shining like your patent leather shoes iv

this was someone's child Melissa Ethridge, "Scarecrow" and I remember another mother's voice in a Laramie, Wyoming courtroom claiming mercy for the murderers of her firstborn Matthew stood for something mercy for those who could not show mercy and a father speaks to his son's killers: I give you life in the memory of one who no longer lives.

May you have a long life, and may you thank Matthew every day for it. and I want the sanctity of scriptures to conjure spells upon my tongue to pray that this season too shall pass as if the words might chant a new scene into being perhaps those farm fields filled with wildflowers the choirs of weeping hushed in the opiate of poppies but I see your pistol-whipped body blood seeping into a nation I remember the officer who cut you free speaking of the braces on your teeth,

Rishma Dunlop

your school ID in the dust she whispers to you in the ambulance words of comfort, Baby boy and the sound of mothers and fathers through endless years is a wailing of sirens in my ear and I wonder, as I touch the memory of my sleeping child her tender fontanel, as I watch her now running fleet-footed through corridors of time, my anthem, my bloodline calling, I wonder, if I could cast away stones, if I could be so merciful to those who would crush her

I wonder, if this new century will hold her, will her mother's faith in memory's insistence, be enough for a millennium of mercy
