

Nicole Cooley

It's un-mothering Sunday and I stretch out alone in my bed, naked under an old crib sheet.

Where are the daughters? I prepare myself by pretending they're already gone. They've already left me. I practice the separation of mother and infant.

And none will want the mother, offering milk.